Research Officer

Research is at the heart of our charitable objectives at Sarcoma UK. The charity provides funding for research to understand sarcoma better, improve treatments and ultimately, make a difference to the lives of people affected by sarcoma. Since 2009, we've funded more than 70 projects, representing an investment of more than £5.5 million.

Our research programme has been expanding significantly over the last few years, with a fully-fledged patient involvement function, networking events for PhD students, an increasing focus on impact, fundraising and communications, and a growing portfolio of research funded in collaboration with other organisations.

The Research Officer role enjoys a varied workload, and brings the opportunity to work with autonomy and develop new skills within a friendly and dynamic team. You will work on a broad range of projects, including taking the lead on our grant management processes, working closely with the Research Manager and the Director of Research, Policy and Support. The post-holder will also work closely with other departments across the charity, including producing engaging research communications content for print, online and social media, and will also have the opportunity to interact with senior researchers, clinicians and people affected by sarcoma.

This is an ideal role for someone with a scientific background and an active interest in research management, and it offers the opportunity to make a real impact for people affected by sarcoma and their families.
